

JOURNAL OF THE SOCIETY FOR AMERICAN MUSIC

VOLUME 11 • NUMBER 2 • MAY 2017

Journal of the Society for American Music

Journal of the Society for American Music (JSAM) is an international, peer-reviewed journal that explores all aspects of American music and music in the Americas. JSAM is dedicated to supporting scholarship that transcends disciplinary boundaries, cutting across historical musicology, music theory, ethnomusicology, cultural theory, and American studies. JSAM encourages international dialogue across disciplines. The journal features articles, reviews of books, recordings, and multimedia items, and explorations of special topics.

Subscriptions

Journal of the Society for American Music (ISSN 1752-1963) is published four times a year, in February, May, August, and November by Cambridge University Press, One Liberty Plaza, Floor 20, New York, NY 10006, USA, for the Society for American Music.

The subscription price of volume 11 (2017), including delivery by air where appropriate (but excluding VAT), is $284 (£153) for institutions print and online; $259 (£140) for institutions online only. Single issues cost $85 (£46). Japanese prices for institutions, including ASP delivery, are available from Kinokuniya Company Ltd., P.O. Box 55, Chitose, Tokyo 156, Japan. Orders, which must be accompanied by payment, may be sent to a bookseller or subscription agent or direct to the publisher: Cambridge University Press, Journals Fulfillment Department, One Liberty Plaza, Floor 20, New York, NY 10006, USA; or Cambridge University Press, Journals Fulfillment Department, UPH, Shaftesbury Road, Cambridge CB2 8BS, UK. Alternatively, you can place an order online at <journals.cambridge.org/sam>.

Individuals wishing to subscribe to the journal should consider joining the Society for American Music. Individuals receive the journal as part of their membership. Other benefits include a copy of the Bulletin, and the annotated Membership Directory. Annual membership rates are $75 (US) for individual members, $30 for spouses/partners, $35 for students, and $50 for retired individuals. If you reside outside the US, please add $10 additional for postage. All payments must be in US funds, drawn on a US bank or by credit card (Visa or Mastercard only). Please direct all membership payments, inquiries, changes of address, and correspondence to the Society for American Music, Stephen Foster Memorial, University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, PA 15260, USA. Telephone (412) 624-3031, fax (412) 624-7447, e-mail SAM@american-music.org, website <www.american-music.org>.

For single issues, please contact customer_service@cambridge.org.

Advertising

For information on display ad sizes, rates, and deadlines for copy, please visit the journal homepage at <journals.cambridge.org/sam> or contact ad_sales@cambridge.org. Information can also be found at <www.american-music.org>.

Internet access

Journal of the Society for American Music is included in the Cambridge Journals Online service, which can be accessed at <journals.cambridge.org>. For information on other Cambridge titles, visit <www.cambridge.org>.

ISSN: 1752-1963

EISSN: 1752-1971

© The Society for American Music 2017. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, in any form or by any means, electronic, photocopying, or otherwise, without permission in writing from Cambridge University Press. Policies, request forms, and contacts are available at: <http://www.cambridge.org/rights/permissions/permission.htm>

Permission to copy (for users in the U.S.A.) is available from Copyright Clearance Center, <http://www.copyright.com>, email: info@copyright.com.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Journal of the Society for American Music, Cambridge University Press, One Liberty Plaza, Floor 20, New York, NY 10006, USA.

Front cover illustration: American Idol contestant Candice Glover reacts to compliments from the judges, 2013. YouTube video screen shot. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=RnW1Pun8XDY>

Journal of the Society for American Music

A quarterly publication of the Society for American Music

Editor

Karen Ahlquist (The George Washington University, USA)

Assistant Editor

Jason Michalek (The George Washington University, USA)

Book Review Editors

Christina Baade (McMaster University, Canada)

Travis Stimeling (West Virginia University, USA)

Media Review Editors

Dana Gorzelany-Mostak (Georgia College and State University, USA)

William Gibbons (Texas Christian University, USA)

Editorial Associate

Mark A. Davidson (University of California, Santa Cruz, USA)

Editorial Board

Naomi André (University of Michigan, USA)

Theo Cateforis (Syracuse University, USA)

William Cheng (Dartmouth College, USA)

Andrew Flory (Carleton College, USA)

Danielle Fosler-Lussier (Ohio State University, USA)

Glenda Goodman (University of Pennsylvania, USA)

David Gramit (University of Alberta, Canada)

Nadine Hubbs (University of Michigan, USA)

Loren Kajikawa (University of Oregon, USA)

Frank Lehman (Tufts University, USA)

Jim Lovensheimer (Vanderbilt University, USA)

Felicia Miyakawa (Independent Scholar, USA)

Nathan Platte (University of Iowa, USA)

Leonora Saavedra (University of California Riverside, USA)

Jessica Sternfeld (Chapman University, USA)

Robynn Stilwell (Georgetown University, USA)

Steve Swayne (Dartmouth College, USA)

Journal of the Society for American Music

Volume 11, Number 2 (May 2017)

Contributors v

Articles

- Dizzy à la Mimi: Jazz, Text, and Translation
Benjamin Givan 121
- Porch and Playhouse, Parlor and Performance Hall: Traversing Boundaries
in Gottschalk's The Banjo
Laura Moore Pruett 155
- Staging Overcoming: Narratives of Disability and Meritocracy in Reality
Singing Competitions
William Cheng 184

Reviews

Books

- Mark Ferris, Star-Spangled Banner: The Unlikely Story of America's National Anthem; Sheryl Kaskowitz, God Bless America: The Surprising History of an Iconic Song; Victor V. Bobetsky, ed., We Shall Overcome: Essays on a Great American Song
Mariana Whitmer 215
- Felix Meyer, Carol J. Oja, Wolfgang Rathert, and Anne C. Shreffler, eds.
Crosscurrents: American and European Music in Interaction, 1900–2000
Jessica Payette 223
- Ken Prouty, Knowing Jazz: Community, Pedagogy, and Canon in the Information Age; Eitan Y. Wilf, School for Cool: The Academic Jazz Program and the Paradox of Institutionalized Creativity
Brian F. Wright 227
- Susan Fast, Dangerous
Eric Smialek 232
- S. Andrew Granade, Harry Partch, Hobo Composer
Navid Bargrizan 235
- Carol J. Oja, Bernstein Meets Broadway: Collaborative Art in a Time of War
Elizabeth A. Wells 238
- Amy Absher, The Black Musicians and the White City: Race and Music in Chicago, 1900–1967; Thomas Bauman, The Pekin: The Rise and Fall of Chicago's First Black-Owned Theater
John Behling 240

Ryan Raul Bañagale, Arranging Gershwin: "Rhapsody in Blue" and the Creation of an American Icon
Geoffrey Block 246

Media

Beyoncé, Lemonade
Lauron Kehrer 250

Jake Heggie, The Radio Hour
Colleen Renihan 252

Andrew Norman, Play, Try
John Phippen 254

Contributors

Navid Bargrivan is a Ph.D. candidate in historical musicology at University of Florida. He has presented papers on intersections of music, technology, and philosophy in the music of Harry Partch, Manfred Stahnke, and Mozart at national and international conferences, including those of the Society for American Music and German Studies Association. His articles, interviews, and papers are published in Müzik-Bilim Dergisi, The Journal of Musicology, Newsletter of the Society of Composers, Inc., and proceedings of conferences in Berlin and Istanbul.

John Behling teaches courses on ethnomusicology, jazz, and popular music at Columbia College and the University of Illinois. He has written on jazz in Chicago, Sammy Davis, Jr., improvisation, and the history of jazz education. He is also a prominent Chicago guitarist and has made recordings of jazz, Celtic, and Brazilian music.

Geoffrey Block is Distinguished Professor of Music at the University of Puget Sound. He has published widely on Charles Ives, American musical theater, Beethoven, and Schubert and is the author of Ives: "Concord" Sonata (Cambridge University Press, 1996); Enchanted Evenings: The Broadway Musical from "Show Boat" to Sondheim and Lloyd Webber (Oxford University Press, 1997; 2nd ed. 2009); and Richard Rodgers (Yale University Press, 2003). He is also the general editor of the Yale Broadway Masters and series editor of Oxford's Broadway Legacies.

William Cheng is an assistant professor of music at Dartmouth College. He is the author of Sound Play: Video Games and the Musical Imagination (2014); and Just Vibrations: The Purpose of Sounding Good (2016). His current book projects include All the Beautiful Musicians (Oxford); Touching Pitch: Dirt, Debt, Color (Michigan); and Queering the Field: Sounding Out Ethnomusicology (Oxford, coedited with Gregory Melchor-Barz). He has written for the Journal of the American Musicological Society, Ethnomusicology, Ethnomusicology Review, Cambridge Opera Journal, 19th-Century Music, and Critical Inquiry, along with Slate, the Washington Post, Huffington Post, Time, Pacific Standard, and Musicology Now.

Benjamin Givan is an associate professor of music at Skidmore College and the author of The Music of Django Reinhardt (2010). He teaches courses in jazz history, twentieth- and twenty-first-century music history, film music, music and philosophy, and post-tonal theory. His jazz scholarship includes another article on Mimi Perrin, which appeared in American Music in 2016.

Lauron Kehrer is a Ph.D. candidate in musicology at the Eastman School of Music, University of Rochester. Her current research examines the intersections of race, gender, and sexuality in contemporary American hip hop. Her work has appeared in American Music, the Journal of the Society for American Music, and Inside Higher Ed. She has presented her research at meetings of the American Musicological Society, Society for American Music, and Society for Ethnomusicology.

Jessica Payette is an associate professor of music at Oakland University in Rochester, Michigan. She specializes in twentieth- and twenty-first century music and has published articles on opera in fin-de-siècle Vienna, monodramatic vocal works, and ballet in the German Democratic Republic.

John Pippen is an adjunct professor of music at Colorado State University, where he teaches undergraduate and graduate courses. His primary research has been an extended ethnographic study of labor and aesthetics in the Chicago new music scene. Additional projects include a chapter in the forthcoming Oxford Handbook of Spectral Music.

Laura Moore Pruett is an associate professor of music at Merrimack College in North Andover, Massachusetts, where she teaches courses in music history, theory, and appreciation. Her publications, which focus mainly on nineteenth-century American music, include an article on sentimentality in the works of Louis Moreau Gottschalk in 19th-Century Music and several articles in the Grove Dictionary of American Music, second edition. Her edition of Gottschalk's two symphonies will be published in A-R Editions' series Music of the United States of America.

Colleen Renihan is an assistant professor at the Dan School of Drama and Music, Queen's University. Her research is focused on issues of memory, historiography, and temporality in American and Canadian twentieth- and twenty-first century opera. Her work has appeared in The Journal of the Society for American Music, Twentieth-Century Music, and Music, Sound, and the Moving Image. She is currently at work on a book manuscript focused on American historically based opera.

Eric Smialek earned his Ph.D. in musicology at McGill University with a dissertation on genre and expression in extreme metal music. His research combines close music analysis with the discourses of fans and critics. Smialek is a three-time winner of IASPM-Canada's Peter Narvaez Student Paper Prize. In addition to chapters in Global Metal Music and Culture (Routledge 2016) and the Routledge Companion to Music Analysis, he has forthcoming articles on Sigur Rós, Meshuggah, Katy Perry, Southern Soul, and music in hockey broadcasts.

Elizabeth A. Wells earned her doctorate in musicology at the Eastman School of Music and is a professor and the Pickard-Bell Chair of Music at Mount Allison University in Sackville, New Brunswick. She is a 3M National Teaching Fellow and co-founder of the International Federation of National Teaching Fellows. Her book on West Side Story was published in 2011, and her research interests include twentieth-century opera, musical theater, and the scholarship of teaching and learning.

Mariana Whitmer is Executive Director of the Society for American Music and a part-time faculty member at the University of Pittsburgh, where she teaches a course on film music. She has consulted for several years on Voices Across Time: Teaching American History Through Song, a joint project of the University and the Society, which uses songs (and their biographies) to enhance social studies curricula in K-12 classrooms.

Brian F. Wright is a Ph.D. candidate at Case Western Reserve University and a temporary assistant professor of music at Fairmont State University. His research focuses on the cultural history of the electric bass in jazz, rock, and rhythm 'n' blues, exploring issues such as social stigma, amateur music making, and historiography.

admiration for Jackson's own risk taking—and it is inspiring. In addition to its scholarly contributions, accessibility for non-scholarly readers, and usefulness in the classroom—I assigned “Desire” for a term paper on race and sexuality—Fast's book might open possibilities for younger scholars, who have not yet achieved her professional level of recognition and seniority, to write a book in this hybrid genre.

Eric Smialek

Journal of the Society for American Music (2017), Volume 11, Number 2, pp. 235–238.
© The Society for American Music 2017 doi:10.1017/S1752196317000116

Harry Partch, Hobo Composer. By S. Andrew Granade. Rochester, NY: University of Rochester Press, 2014.

Since the 1990s, music scholars have begun only gradually to grapple with the American maverick Harry Partch and his seminal theoretical, music philosophical, and compositional ideas. Besides Partch's own comprehensive treatise, Genesis of a Music, and his collected journals, essays, introductions, and librettos, we have the work of the late Bob Gilmore, who authored a biography and a study of Partch's early vocal pieces, and Thomas McGeary's catalog of Partch's works, scores, bibliography, and discography.¹ Most other Anglophone publications are limited to individual aspects of Partch's works.² In the German literature, articles by Manfred Stahnke, a composer and musicologist, explain Partch's intonational and aesthetic ideas and how they have influenced his own microtonal concepts.³ Intervening in this fragmentary literature, S. Andrew Granade's Harry Partch, Hobo Composer presents an exhaustive account of U.S. hobo culture and the ways in which it shaped not only Partch's existential and artistic philosophy, but also his music theoretical and compositional procedures. The book is organized as a chronological study of the music that Partch created while living as a hobo among the multitude of unemployed, homeless men during the Great Depression and after, from 1928 to 1943.

¹ Harry Partch, Genesis of a Music, 2nd ed. (New York: Da Capo, 1974); Harry Partch, Bitter Music: Collected Journals, Essays, Introductions, and Librettos, ed. Thomas McGeary (Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 1991); Bob Gilmore, Harry Partch: a Biography (New Haven, CT: Yale University, 1998); Bob Gilmore, “Harry Partch: the Early Vocal Works 1930–33” Ph.D. diss., The Queen's University of Belfast, 1996; Thomas McGeary, The Music of Harry Partch: A Descriptive Catalog (New York: Institute for Studies in the American Music, 1991). The main sources of Partch's materials are the Harry Partch Estate Archive, 1918–1991, and the Music and Performing Arts Library Harry Partch Collection, 1914–2007, both in the the Sousa Archives and Center for American Music of the University of Illinois at Urbana–Champaign. The special collection Harry Partch Music Scores, 1922–1972, which is located at the University of California in San Diego, contains facsimiles of Partch's music composed between 1922 and 1972.

² See for example, Harry Partch, “Experiments in Notation,” in Contemporary Composers on Contemporary Music, ed. Elliott Schwartz, et al. (New York: Da Capo, 1978), 209–221; Ronald V. Wiecki, “12-Tone Paralysis: Harry Partch in Madison, Wisconsin, 1944–1947,” American Music 9, no. 1 (1991): 43–66; Bob Gilmore, “The Climate since Harry Partch,” Contemporary Music Review 22, nos. 1–2 (2003): 15–33; Ben Johnston, “The Corporealism of Harry Partch,” in Maximum Clarity” and Other Writings on Music, ed. Bob Gilmore (Urbana and Chicago: University of Illinois Press, 2006), 216; Ben Johnston, “Harry Partch/John Cage,” in Maximum Clarity” and Other Writings on Music, ed. Bob Gilmore (Urbana and Chicago: University of Illinois Press, 2006), 232; Ben Johnston, “Beyond Harry Partch,” in Maximum Clarity” and Other Writings on Music, ed. Bob Gilmore (Urbana and Chicago: University of Illinois Press, 2006), 243; Philip Blackburn, “Harry Partch and the Philosopher's Tone,” Hyperion 2, no. 1 (2008): 1–20.

By recounting the shifting hobo, transient, and migrant cultures of the Great Depression era, Granade contextualizes Partch's affinity for and conscious submission to the transient lifestyle as the composer meticulously adopted the hobo persona and gave his music an essential hobo ethos. While living as a transient, Partch collected U.S. folk songs, speeches, and texts; conceptualized a pioneering forty-three-tone-to-octave intonational system; and designed a plethora of original instruments. His just-intoned, eleven-limit scale enabled him to capture all the inflections of a voice reciting these folk texts, songs, and speeches. Partch constructed several visually and acoustically impressive instruments based on his microtonal system and composed works that relied upon his notions of "monophony" and "corporeality" in order to present an inherently U.S. music growing out of the hobo culture.

Granade builds his compelling study upon two pillars: the notions of conceptual exoticism and documentary imagination. In the prologue, he argues that Partch's use of iconic American figures, such as the hobo and the transient, in his pieces Barstow, U.S. Highball, San Francisco, The Letter, and Ulysses at the Edge of the World are conceptually exotic.⁴ The fact that Partch collected and set the inflections of hobo texts to music while he was hoboeing grants his works an exoticism that emerges from the existential underpinnings of American folk culture. In Granade's words: "Partch presents life as hoboes lived it and allows the audience to infer what it will" (12). Granade demonstrates that decorative exoticism, that is, the superficial integration of folk elements within the apparatus of Euro-American art music, deviates from Partch's complete immersion in the U.S. folk tradition.

On the other hand, even as he lived it, Partch was also documenting hobo culture. His direct engagement with hobo songs took on the aspects of documentary, as we observe in his Bitter Music—a musical, visual, and literary journal of his hobo years. Throughout the book, Granade expounds upon the cultural value of Partch's musical documentary imagination, setting Partch alongside such figures as Dorothea Lange in photography and John Steinbeck in literature, all of whom contributed immensely to the documentation of the hobo, transient, and migrant traditions.

³ See, for example, Manfred Stahnke, "Gedanken zu Harry Partch," Neuland: Ansätze zur Musik d. Gegenwart: Jahrbuch 2, ed. Herbert Henck (Bergisch Gladbach: Neuland Musikverlag, 1982), 243–251; Manfred Stahnke, "Zwei Blumen der reinen Stimmung im 20. Jahrhundert: Harry Partch und Gerard Grisey," Hamburger Jahrbuch für Musikwissenschaft 17, ed. Constantin Floros, Friedrich Geiger, and Thomas Schäfer (Frankfurt/M.: Peter Lang, 2000), 369–88; Manfred Stahnke, "Partch Harp: (Er)findung einer nicht-oktavierenden Musik," in Musikkulturgeschichte: Festschrift für Constantin Floros zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. Peter Peterson (Wiesbaden: Breitkopf & Härtel, 1990), 11–26.

⁴ These five pieces constitute The Wayward, a collection of Partch's hobo music from 1935 to 1941.

Besides a prologue and an epilogue, Harry Partch, Hobo Composer consists of eight chapters, which focus on Partch's life and works, and two interludes, which explore the culture of hoboes, transients, and migrants during the Great Depression. The book's first chapter portrays Partch's pivotal departure from equal temperament and traditional way of life and arrival at just intonation and hoboing in the late 1920s and early 1930s. The first interlude that follows offers a fascinating excursion to the hobo world beyond the scope of Partch's music. Granade explores the emergence and evolution of these underrepresented groups of people throughout the country, particularly in California. He elaborates on the political and economic conditions that contributed to transience and the ways in which the government dealt with it. In the second chapter, Granade investigates the shift of Partch's documentary imagination toward a transient lifestyle during the same period in which he composed Bitter Music, a groundbreaking format that integrates novel, documentary journalism, a musical score, and drawings. The third chapter analyzes Bitter Music, and the fourth illustrates Partch's nomadic lifestyle and how it affected the composition of Barstow, his hobo concerto, as well as his other works of the period.

In order to fully explain why Partch adopted a hobo persona, the author elaborates in the second interlude on how the hobo was understood and constructed by artists, writers, filmmakers, and the press at the time. Chapters 5 and 6 discuss Partch's U.S. Highball and the other pieces of The Wayward, respectively. Granade reveals the evolution of U.S. Highball—the musical account of Partch's hobo journey from California to Illinois in 1941—as represented in the manuscripts preserving its three versions. The seventh chapter deals with a crucial period in Partch's life, from 1941 to 1944, when he established his persona of a hobo composer in Illinois, New York, and Massachusetts while giving concerts, lectures, and presentations that featured his startling compositions, instruments, and theories. The eighth and final chapter approaches Partch's residency in Madison (1944–1947) to work under a grant from the University of Wisconsin, where he eventually published Genesis of a Music. In this chapter and in the epilogue, Granade clarifies how Partch exploited and finally abandoned the hobo image in the last three decades of his life. During these years, while residing mostly in California, Partch composed corporeal music dramas such as Oedipus, The Bewitched, and Delusion of the Fury. As Granade demonstrates, even in these works, Partch returns to his affection for the hobo culture and integrates hobo elements in his music whenever he felt the need.

Articulating the conceptual exoticism of Partch's Americana music, Granade concludes that “not only did Partch forge an art that sounded American, it was American” (283). As he asserts throughout the book, Partch's worldview, lifestyle, aesthetics, and music were truly interrelated. With its focus on Partch's own integration of these elements of his life, perhaps the only shortcoming of the book is the fact that it does not expand much on Partch's microtonal theory as the basis of his intonational system, instruments, and compositions, although it perfectly illustrates the historical and contextual background of his hobo music. In fact, grasping Partch's hobo music hinges upon comprehending his theory of just intonation and his peculiar notational system, as well as his notions of monophony and corporeality. Harry Partch, Hobo Composer, however, goes beyond being a mere musicological study of a fundamentally American composer; it is also a probing anthropological study of hobo, transient, and migrant cultures in the United States. Granade's book stands out as a valuable addition to the scholarship of American culture, which, for the first time in the musicological literature, affirms the cultural and musical significance of Partch's U.S. hobo music.

Navid Bargrizan

Journal of the Society for American Music (2017), Volume 11, Number 2, pp. 238–240.
© The Society for American Music 2017 doi:10.1017/S1752196317000128

Bernstein Meets Broadway: Collaborative Art in a Time of War. By Carol J. Oja. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2014.

With Leonard Bernstein's centenary approaching in 2018, more books on the musician have naturally started to appear. Two studies of West Side Story (one by Nigel Simeone and one by this author) came out in the last six years, and a recent study by Helen Smith explores his theater works in general. Simeone has also edited a collection of Bernstein's letters, and Alicia Kopfstein-Penk has recently written a book on his Young People's Concerts. Paul Laird, a noted Bernstein scholar, has updated his guide to research with Hsin Lin just this past year.¹ Timely, then, is this study of one of Bernstein's lesser-known works, On the Town (and its precursor, the ballet Fancy Free), by Carol Oja. Bernstein Meets Broadway: Collaborative Art in a Time of War comes from Oxford's Broadway Legacies Series, which includes single-work studies like Jim Lovensheimer's South Pacific volume, Todd Decker's Show Boat study, and Dominic McHugh's book on My Fair Lady. In a similar vein, Oja has explored On the Town in exhaustive detail, looking at the creative genesis of the show (and the ballet Fancy Free, on which it is very loosely based), the racial politics of the work, and, finally, the show's musical style.

The greatest value of this engagingly written and richly documented volume is that it covers, for the first time, some of the most formative influences in Bernstein's theater career, not to mention the entertainment and Broadway worlds of the 1930s through the 1940s. In chapters 1 and 2, Oja traces the work of Betty Comden and Adolph Green, Bernstein's collaborators in On the Town, back to their work with the Revuers, a nightclub and radio comedy team that put together some of the most inventive (and hilarious) musical and theatrical work of their time. Not only were they inventive in their comedy, however, they were active in their politics, and one

¹ Nigel Simeone, West Side Story (Farnham: Ashgate, 2009); Elizabeth A. Wells, West Side Story: Cultural Perspectives on an American Musical (Lanham, MD: Scarecrow Press, 2011); Nigel Simeone, The Leonard Bernstein Letters (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2013); Helen Smith, There's a Place for Us: The Musical Theatre Works of Leonard Bernstein (Farnham: Ashgate, 2011); Alicia Kopfstein-Penk, Leonard Bernstein and His Young People's Concerts (Lanham, MD: Rowman and Littlefield, 2013); Paul R. Laird and Hsin Lin, Leonard Bernstein: A Research and Information Guide, 2nd ed. (New York: Routledge, 2015).